

NANCY BUI

Nancy Bui, a resilient refugee who arrived in the United States at the age of 10, has defied many odds. With English degrees from UCLA and Stanford University, she is a published author and respected commentator on educational issues in renowned publications such as the New York Times and Wall Street Journal.

Her exceptional leadership has earned her the title of 2020-2021 Elementary Principal of the Year, along with two nominations for the Exemplary Woman in Education award by the Association of California School Administrators. Nancy's commitment to social justice and amplifying AAPI voices in public education is evident through her role as the founder of ASPICE (Asian Subgroups Pacific Islander Coalition for Equity), an organization based in San Francisco.

While being a proud mother of three children under 7, Nancy holds her education in the Anaheim Union High School District close to her heart. She attributes her success to the strong foundation laid by her community and remains dedicated to creating opportunities for others.

Nancy recognizes that her personal journey is not unique, but rather a reflection of the experiences shared by many within the AAPI community who have faced similar challenges. She humbly acknowledges that her accomplishments serve as a platform to shed light on the collective struggles and triumphs of AAPI individuals and their families. Nancy understands the power of representation and the impact it can have on individuals and communities. By sharing her story and achievements, she hopes to inspire and empower others to embrace their own narratives, overcome obstacles, and reach their fullest potential.

Through her unwavering commitment to educational equity, social justice, and AAPI representation, Nancy strives to pave the way for a more inclusive society where every individual, regardless of their background, has the opportunity to succeed and thrive.
